Healing the Wounded Body of Christ

Throughout the school year, children at OMPH School have been using their eyes, ears, lips, hands, hearts and minds to be the Body of Christ for others. Upon seeing someone in need in class or on the recess yard, they offer help. They listen to a friend when they are down. They offer words of kindness to comfort them. They love others and are forgiving to those who wrong them. Most importantly, in the silence of their hearts, our students offer prayers for their families and classmates who are sick, injured, or otherwise in need. Our school theme for Lent is "Healing the Wounds of Jesus." During Lent, the students will continue these acts of kindness, keeping in mind that when they are reaching out to others, they are reaching out to Jesus. When they see someone who is hurting and needs a helping hand, they will offer it as if they were comforting Jesus. Looking for ways to help someone is easy, but taking the time to stop and help someone is not as easy. It means giving up what we want to do and making time for someone else. The children are unselfish in their giving, unconditional in their love, and always ready to forgive. Every time they do an act of kindness, offer a prayer, or extend a helping hand, they do it with love knowing they are healing the wounds of Jesus!
